

There tends to be a big generational difference between how people use e-mail.

The younger generation uses it like the phone – quick and easy, fast and informal.

The older generation uses it like a letter – formal, and with time taken over it.

That might be fine for personal emails, but it can be fatal when it comes to business.

